

THE COLLABORATIVE EFFECT.

Technology companies are touting video conferencing solutions as a way to slash overhead costs and save money. But to many, the term “Video Conferencing” conjures up images of an old TV monitor on a rolling cart with cables running all over the floor. As a result, very few attorneys are willing to use the system with clients. If this sounds familiar, today’s telepresence video conferencing solutions just might be the answer you’ve been waiting for.

Today’s video conferencing solutions provide real-time, face-to-face collaboration with clients, partners, contractors and employees over a broadband network. What’s more, leading video conferencing manufacturers, such as LifeSize and Polycom, are now offering affordable video conferencing solutions that put this technology well within the budget of most small law firms.

How Law Firms are Benefiting from Video Conferencing Solutions

Gathering Expert and Witness Testimony

- Sensitive/remote witness testimony. Video conferencing allows witnesses or experts to be offsite to give their critical testimony, which is very beneficial for victims who are fearful of being in the same room with the accused.
- Inmate and officer testimony. Minimizes inmate transportation costs, reduces security risks related to inmate movement, and maximizes prison and jail personnel resources.
- Depositions. Schedule and conduct long-distance deposition hearings more quickly and efficiently.

Gaining Firmwide Efficiencies

- Partner and board meetings. A video conferencing solution with telepresence can transform your boardroom into a hub of productivity. You can host online meetings, training and events, add the impact of multimedia to your presentations and much more.
- Litigation conferences. Video conferencing technology gives your firm the ability to streamline strategy sessions and settlement conferences.
- Parole and bail hearings. Video conferencing solutions increase your firm’s capacity to process cases and arrive at decisions.
